Metals . . .

Building Blocks of America

Metals have been called the building blocks of America. They are vital to the defense, welfare and prosperity of our country.

The minerals industry which supplies our metals is the basic keystone. Without it no industry could flourish, for it provides the raw materials required to make the tools for all other industry.

Our industrialized society expands to give us higher and better standards of living. And with it man's dependence upon mineral raw materials steadily increases. Yet we seldom stop to recognize or appraise the source of products we use and the luxuries we enjoy. We take them for granted, largely unmindful of the fact that the majority of those we can see, touch and use came from mines.

The kind of economy we live in today cannot do without the products of mines. We use them in our housing and construction, in our power and communications systems, our transportation; for industrial machinery and equipment, to help supply our food and give us new sources of fresh water. The minerals industry or its products enter into every phase of human endeavor.

The Anaconda Company in Montana has been an important supplier of mineral raw materials for many years. It is our goal to keep our mineral resources—those now in use and others still to be developed—supplying the needs of America and working for Montana far into the future.

To do so we have to meet competition in two forms—that of other mining districts in the U.S. and foreign countries where copper can be produced more cheaply, and the competition of substitute materials. And we have to do it under conditions where the selling price of copper is determined by supply and demand on the world market. This precludes the possibility of simply raising prices to meet increased costs, as is often the solution in other fields, and leaves us particularly vulnerable to cost increases from any source.

Our job in Montana is more difficult today because of the greater problems of economics, transportation, engineering and technology, which arise from the pattern of higher costs and lower ore grades. The industry alone cannot overcome all the problems. There is need for broad public understanding and for realistic political and economic policies. These are essential to prolong present mining operations in our state and to bring forth new reserves in a time when economically useful deposits are more difficult to find and more costly to develop.

Mining must be encouraged and enabled to grow to provide our expanding economy and population with adequate sources of raw materials.

What Is Anaconda?

The Anaconda Company is a Montana corporation.

It is the state's largest single industrial employer.

It is a major taxpayer. In three counties, Silver Bow, Deer Lodge and Flathead, it is the largest property taxpayer.

It meets a payroll of over $5 million a month. It provides a good livelihood, directly and indirectly, for thousands of Montana families.

Anaconda normally expends in Montana more than $175 million annually. This money enters every phase of Montana life. It helps to create jobs in other industries, trades and professions, and to generate millions in additional taxes for support of our schools and government.

In the past five years its capital expenditures, in addition to operating costs, have amounted to $165 million for new plants and equipment in Montana.

It is the producer of copper, aluminum, zinc and other metals, and of quality forest products. Its zinc plants at Great Falls and Anaconda constitute the largest electrolytic zinc refining capacity in the United States.

It operates an Environmental Engineering Department whose sole concern is control of water and air pollution and other environmental problems.

It is a good customer of hundreds of Montana businesses, large and small.

It is a leading corporate citizen, working to do a good job in and for Montana.
